Dear Hans,

I am delighted to learn that you are working on a column named "Approaching Chinese Students". To help you capture the campus lives of middle school students through short videos, I am writing to share a few suggestions.

It would be fascinating to include scenes depicting the daily routines, like their good study habits, lively lunch breaks, and bustling class transitions, which will offer viewers a glimpse into the daily lives of Chinese middle school students. Besides, I suggest displaying the range of extracurricular activities students actively participate in, such as clubs, sports, and arts programs, to highlight the varied ways students nurture their interests and explore their passions after class.

I am confident that your column will serve as a bridge to connect Chinese students with those from different cultures. Wish you all the best.

Sincerely,

Li Hua

Breaking Boundaries: Kelly's Journey to Boxing

Created by Yanlin Huang

读后续写原文

Ballet was a way of life in Kelly's family. Her elder sister Serena was now dancing at a top college. Though Kelly's mom always wanted her to follow in her sister's footsteps and Kelly herself was good at ballet, her love for ballet had faded years before, and she was eager for a new challenge.

One day at school, as Kelly left the dance studio, she walked past the gym, fascinated by boxers training inside the boxing ring. She was deeply impressed by how hard they hit and how fast they moved. In fact, she'd long been attracted to boxing.

She pulled a piece of paper from her backpack. On the familiar Oakwood High School Club Sign-up Sheet was the phrase: BOXING CLUB TRYOUT. That was what Kelly really wanted to do. She knew her mom had high expectations for her when it came to ballet. Tired of trying to keep up with her sister, Kelly was ready to carve her own path.

The next day, she gathered her courage and told Serena about her new passion. At first, Serena didn't understand and thought she was just joking. But when she saw Kelly was serious, she replied, "You know Mom wants you to be a ballet dancer, right? Besides, boxing is only for boys, and you're so good at ballet. Lean into your strength, Kelly."

"But this is where I want to put my strength," Kelly insisted, "and what exactly does 'only for boys' mean, anyway? Boxing is a sport for everyone!"

Gradually, touched by her determination and passion, Serena began to understand and support her. Kelly could feel it. Her sister was going to respect her decision, no matter what. But that was nothing compared to the preparations for the tryout, where she was required to show her footwork and punching abilities with other candidates. Boxing didn't come natural to Kelly, but she had made up her mind to stick with her choice.

- Then Kelly began her training for the tryout, keeping it a secret from her mom. As usual, she continued attending ballet sessions, using the time to analyze the strength of dancers, applying the insights to boxing. To avoid arousing suspicion of her mom, Kelly told her she had joined an after-school study group, which explained her extra time away from home. Every day after school, she would slip into the empty dance studio, practicing her punches and footwork. In the evening, she would watch boxing videos on her phone, studying defensive techniques and striking combinations. Her heart raced each time her mom called or approached, fearful that her secret would be discovered. But Kelly remained steadfast, despite mastering boxing was more challenging than she anticipated. Anyhow, there was no regret as she tried her best.

- The following Monday, results of the boxing tryout were posted. Anxious and expectant, Kelly approached the announcement board and scanned the list, surprised to find her name. Ecstatic, she rushed to share the news with Serena, who swept her sister into her arms, supportive of her determination in pursuing her passion. That evening, Kelly gathered the courage to tell her mom everything. At first, a sense of shock spread over her mom's face as she learnt the truth. Yet seeing the commitment in Kelly's eyes, mom gradually softened her expression into a bittersweet smile. "Compared with following the family tradition, your happiness was apparently more important," mom beamed, stroking her hair. Deeply moved, Kelly hugged her mom tightly, grateful for her tolerance and hopeful for the boxer path she carved.

- She spent hours every day after school in the gym, practicing her footwork and punches. Her ballet training gave her an advantage in balance and grace, but she struggled to build the strength and speed needed for boxing. Learning about the situation, Serena helped where she could, giving her encouragement and sometimes joining her for late-night runs.
- She would sneak away to the school gym during lunch breaks and after school, practicing her footwork and punches under the guidance of the boxing club's coach. The coach was impressed by Kelly's resilience in boxing, sensing tremendous potential in her.
- She researched boxing techniques and worked tirelessly, using her lunch breaks to practice her punches against the air. Her ballet background helped her with flexibility and posture, but she needed to build up her endurance and strength to compete with the other aspiring boxers.

第一段细节表达

- She watched online tutorials, practiced shadowboxing in her room, and even sought advice from the school's boxing coach. Although her ballet background helped her develop fluent footwork and posture, she had to work on her stamina and the power of her punches to become a true boxer.
- She spent every free moment practicing her footwork, using the agility she had developed through years of ballet to her advantage. She watched videos of professional boxers, studying their techniques, and practiced with members who were already part of the club, hoping to perfect her punches.
- Day after day, she snuck away to the local boxing gym after ballet practice, working tirelessly on her punches and footwork. The discipline she had acquired in ballet served her well, helping her push through the exhausting workouts and perfect her technique.

To keep herself in the dark, she would volunteer to do the laundry, to wash and dry her boxing clothes. Each secret step made her more determined, even if it also made her journey more complicated.
- She would pretend to be tired from ballet practice during dinner, attributing her sore muscles and bruised knuckles to exhausting dance rehearsals. As she learned to throw jabs, hooks, and uppercuts, she felt the exhilarating thrill of pursuing her passion.
